Jefferson Davis' Gift to His Godson

A reminiscence of the late war devel-oped at Sedalia the other day when Jefferson Davis Smith, a namesake and great-grandson of the late president of the southern confederacy, received from the executors of the Davis estate a solid silver gold-lined sugar-bowl and a silver knife and fork, which were presented to Mr. Smith at Hurricane farm in Mississippl in 1861. The leader of the lost cause stood as godfather for young Smith, and his parents were presented with the bowl and knife and fork, all suitably engraved, to be given to the boy when of suitable age. When the federals raided that portion of Mississippi all the silverware of the Davis schold was buried for safe keeping, the gifts to, young Smith being among the articles. It was several years after the war before the valuables were recovered, and Jefferson Davis became the enstedian of them. When Mr. Davis' estate was administered upon it was found that the sugar-bowl and knife and fork were the property of Mr. Smith, but not until a short time ago was he located in Sedalia and received the arti-

WASHINGTON, March 30 .- An applica yesterday, from Nelson Morris, of Chicago, for inspection under the law of March 4, 1891, of hogs and hog products The regulations for such inspection are already drawn up so far as necessary for compliance with the requirements ken, Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British of the law. In some details these regulations may be modified as experience indicates to be necessary so as to mini-mize as much as possible any incoa-eral Wanamaker, and many others venience or expense entailed upon the prominent in society and official life secretary's determination to carry out to the full the powers given him under the law to secure such an inspection as will absolutely forbid on the part of lilles against a background of potted any foreign government suspicion or plants. accusation regarding the healthfulness of our animal food products. ers threw spit-balls, and the rejoicing over So far as Mr. Morris is concerned he expresses the utmost confidence in the good results of the law and every will-ingness to co-operate in fully carrying it Lieut. Aglar, of the may, headed the out. Referring to this law and to that which provides for the regulation by the secretary of agriculture of the con- father. At the altar the bride was met dition of cattle-carrying vessels, he declares his conviction that these laws will help the farming and cattle-raising interests beyond anything now possible to estimate. Foreign countries, he says, will not take our animal products for human food without inspection, and he is persuaded that by these two bills becoming a law millions will be saved to this country. He believes another result will be, by securing a foreign export demand as an escape valve for our export products, to greatly mini-mize gambling in hog products, heretofore so prevalent. As to the cattle-carrying vessel inspection bill, he gives it as his experience as one of the largest cattle-shippers in this county, that heretofore the captain of the vessel has been absolute master on the ocean with the result that the poor dumb leasts have been liable to ill treatment, an evil which will be fully remedied under the provisions of the bill in question. He adds that whereas he is now killing 2,500 hogs per day and hopes to soon increase that number to 5,000, he would not have killed any had not the in-

A Scheme to Get Speaker Elder of the Nebraska House Out of the Way. LINCOLN. Neb., March 30.-It is alleged that an attempt was made Friday night to spirit Speaker Elder away to orevent him from signing the maximum freight bill, but it was unsuccessful. A dispatch from his home in Clay Center was handed to him saying: "Come home quick: I am sick." It was signed M. A. Elder. That is his wife's name, but as she always signs her name Maggie A. Elder, he thought it fishy. Upon investigation it was found that though she was sick she had not sent a dispatch nor authorized one.
